

Peter Tupaczewski is a freelance graphics designer who has been working with various graphical applications for years. He has designed demonstrations for companies using Flash in order to display their products to potential customers. These presentations allowed the companies to have their products shown in an interactive format, which allowed customers to see these products in a new light. He has also created 3D animations that have been used by multimedia companies. Peter is a graduate of the Chubb Institute Web Design program and is currently an undergraduate student at New Jersey Institute of Technology majoring in Information Technology with a concentration in Network Applications.
